Recordings of Ho Chi Minh's voice in his speeches on 2 September 1952 and 26 January 1953 have been compared with a recording made at Fontainebleau in 1946. French officials agree with  personnel, one of whom had several times heard Ho speak in person, that the voice is the same.

The dialect used is a mixture of Tonkinese and Annamese of the Vinh region. The voice on the 1952 recordings is somewhat weaker and more hurried than in 1946.

The recordings have been dispatched to the Institute Phonétique in Paris for systematic analysis.
